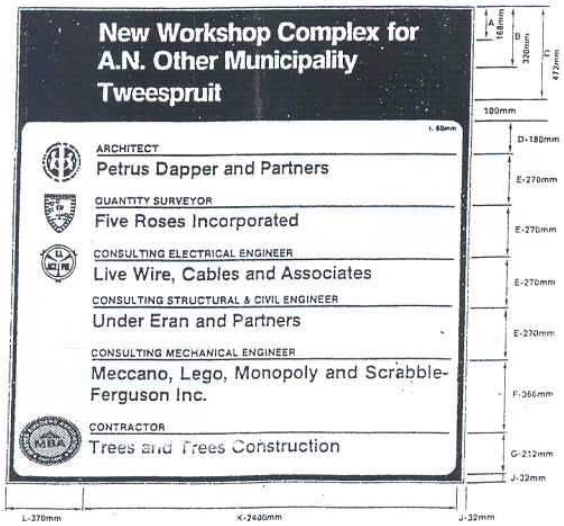
Backpage – 16 August 2011

Site Notice Boards

Site Notice Boards indicating important information regarding a building site are prescribed by many bills of quantities, Bargaining Council Agreements, Municipal Bylaws, etc. For this reason a standard site notice board is often specified by the architect or quantity surveyor in the contract documents. An example of the layout of the board is provided below.

The specification for the site notice board such as the size, the lettering, colours, placement of association or institute logos, etc. is also provided. It should be noted that the column on the left of the board is not for the builder or architect firm's logo but for the association or institute to which he belongs, i.e. Institute of Architects, ASAQS and of course our own MBA sticker next to the contractors name.



(GA)

Note: This article and other useful articles can also be found on our website.